The selected study area was Kathmandu and Pokhara of Nepal. Total Fifty five (55) students have participated in this compulsore field trip. In the post field a report is prepared by the students participated in the field.

Purpose of The Field

Fieldwork is widely regarded as an essential part of undergraduate education and lecturers generally agree that it represents one of the most effective and enjoyable form of teaching and learning process for both student and teachers. This Field learning provides the opportunity to experiment with the wide variety of different modes of course delivery and have a valuable role as a vehicle for the integration of many theoretical and practical concepts taught within a degree. This field learning process in practice provides a unique opportunity to deepen the knowledge about the social work profession through active participation in it. Throughout the practical experience by students are able to work with actual field learning in social work education.
